

Based on the childhood experience of Georgie Badiel

THE WATER PRINCESS

Written by Susan Verde

Illustrated by Peter H. Reynolds

G. P. Putnam's Sons

I am Princess Gie Gie.

My Kingdom ...

the African sky, so wide and so close.

I can almost touch
the sharp edges of the stars.

I can tame the wild dogs with my song.

I can make the tall grass sway when I dance.

I can make the wind play hide-and-seek.

But I cannot make the water come closer.

I cannot make the water run clearer.

No matter what I command.

It is early morning.
Still dark.

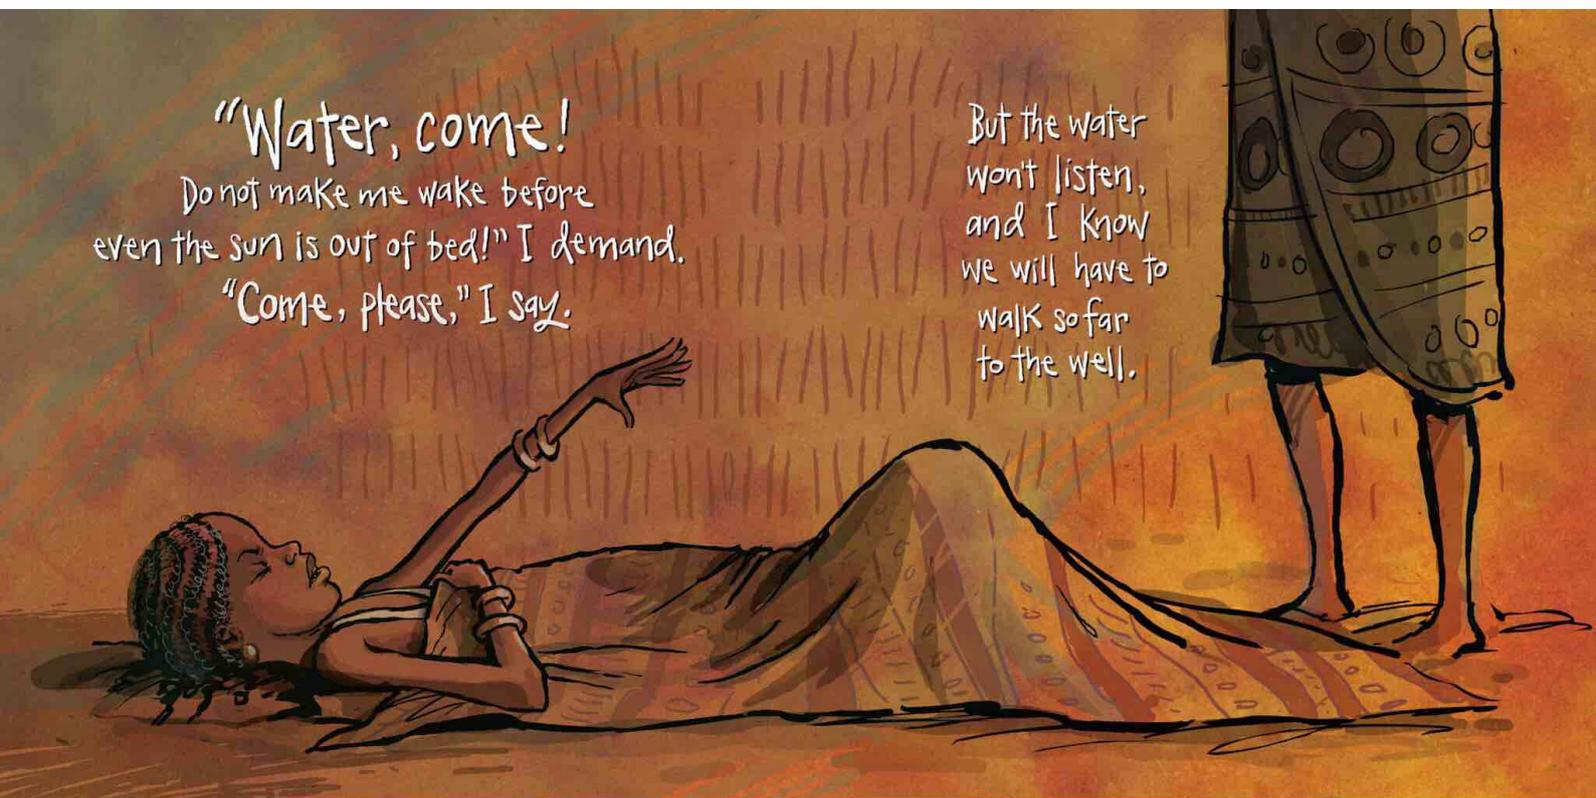

My mother wakes me.
"Gie Gie, my princess,
it is time to get up.
We must collect the water."

"Water, come!

Do not make me wake before even the sun is out of bed!" I demand.

"Come, please," I say.

But the water
won't listen, and I know we will have to walk so far to the well.

I am too sleepy
to put on my crown.

I think of the pot that will rest on my braids instead.

The thirst comes quick — dry lips, dry throat.

I squeeze my eyes shut.

I see it.

Clear.

I dip my toes in it.

Cool.

I scoop it up
and bring it to my lips.

Slowly, I open my eyes.
Nothing.

I Kick the dust.

I grab my empty pot and place it upon my head. My mother does the same and our journey begins, full of song.

My maman adds her melody.
Our steps are light;
we twirl and laugh together.
The miles give us room to dance.

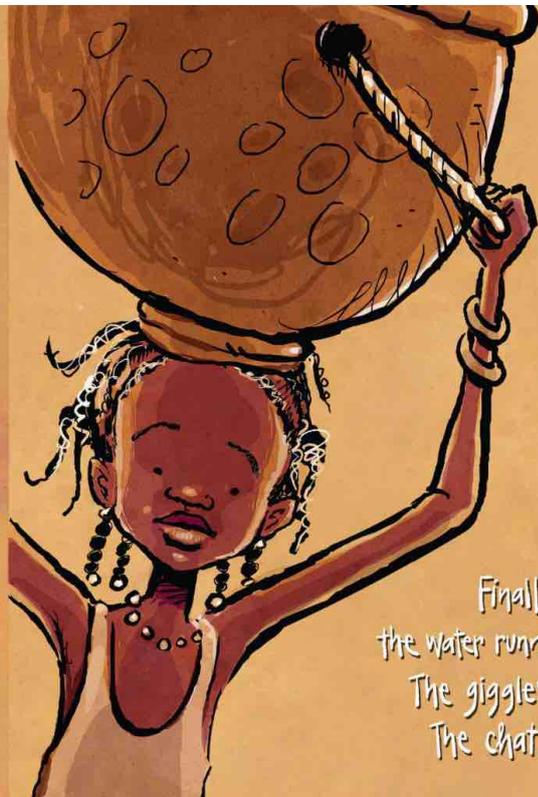

Halfway there,

We stop for a moment at the giant Karite tree, long enough to grab a handful of sweet shea nuts for energy.

We can keep the dance going just a little longer.

"Maman, are we there yet?"

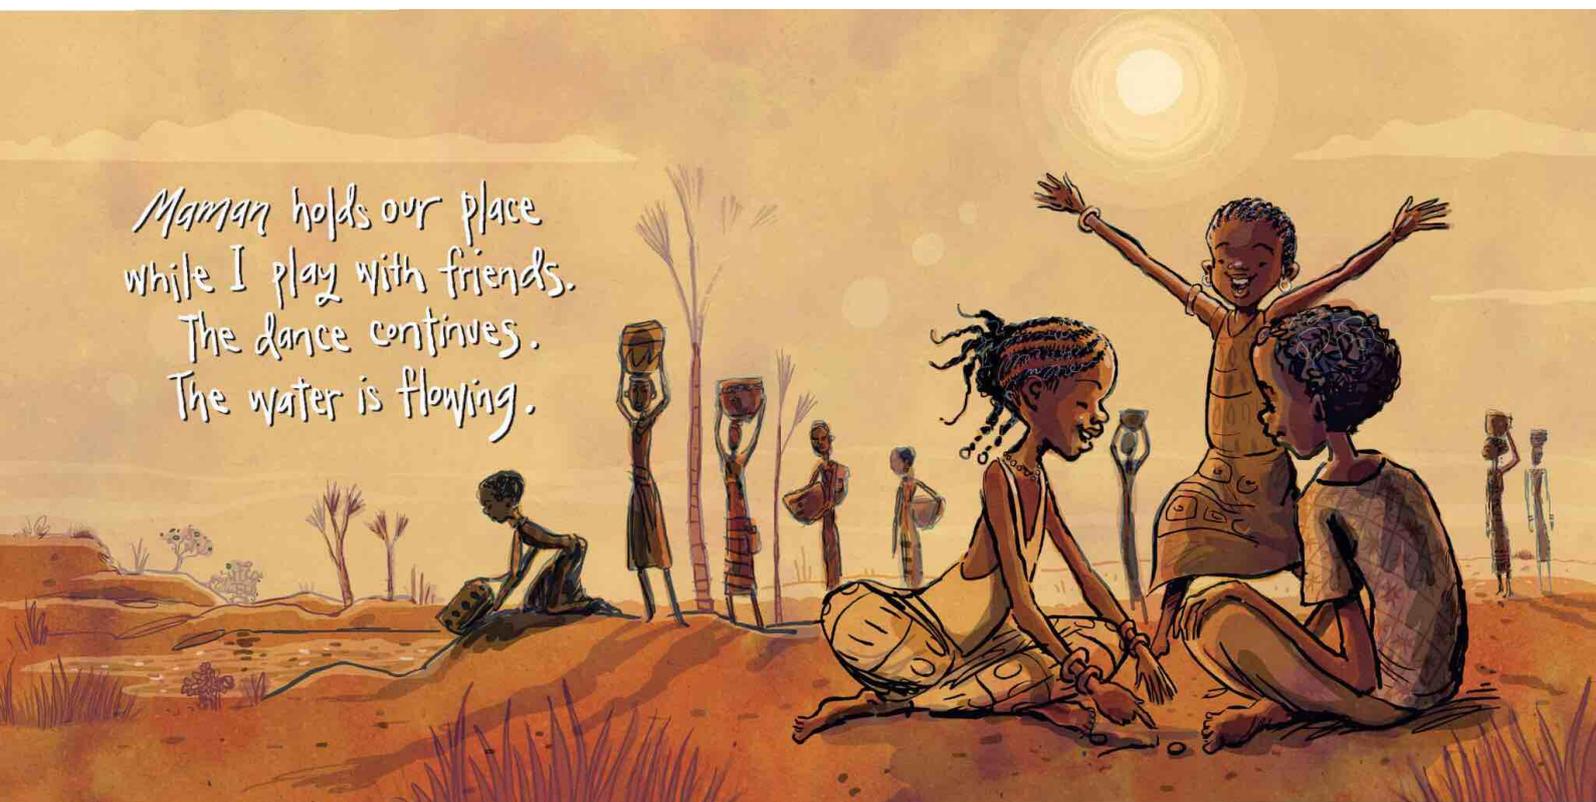

Finally, I hear
the water running from the well.
The giggles of my friends.
The chatter of women.

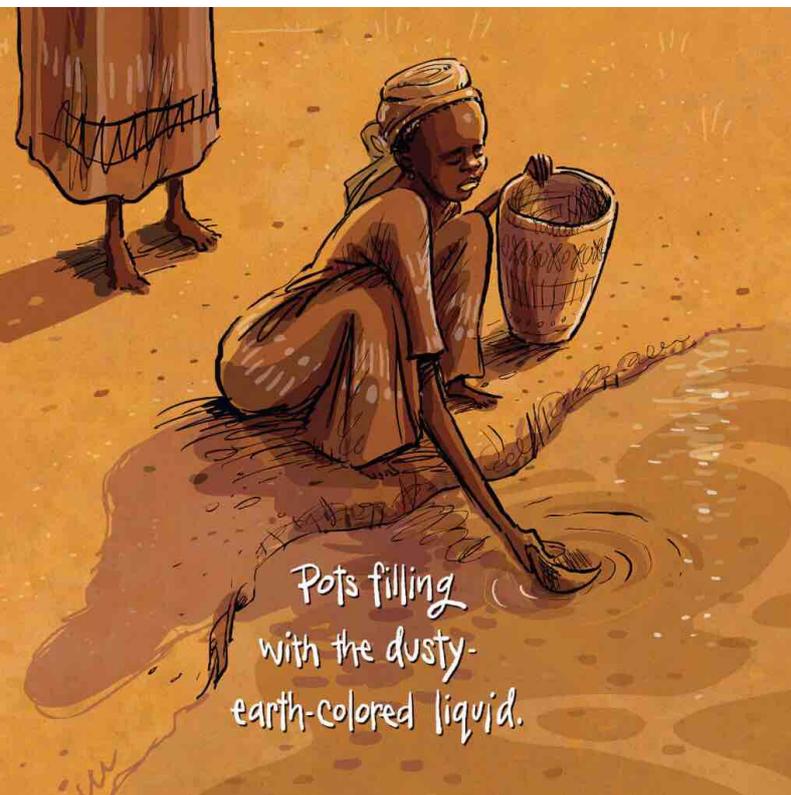

Some have traveled farther than I,

only to return home when the sun has gone to bed.

*Maman holds our place
while I play with friends.
The dance continues.
The water is flowing.*

Pots filling with the dusty-earth-colored liquid.

"Gie Gie. Come.
Maintenant!"

My turn now.

The dance home has slowed to careful steps.
My thirst so heavy, like the full pot I carry.
Our song is softer now.

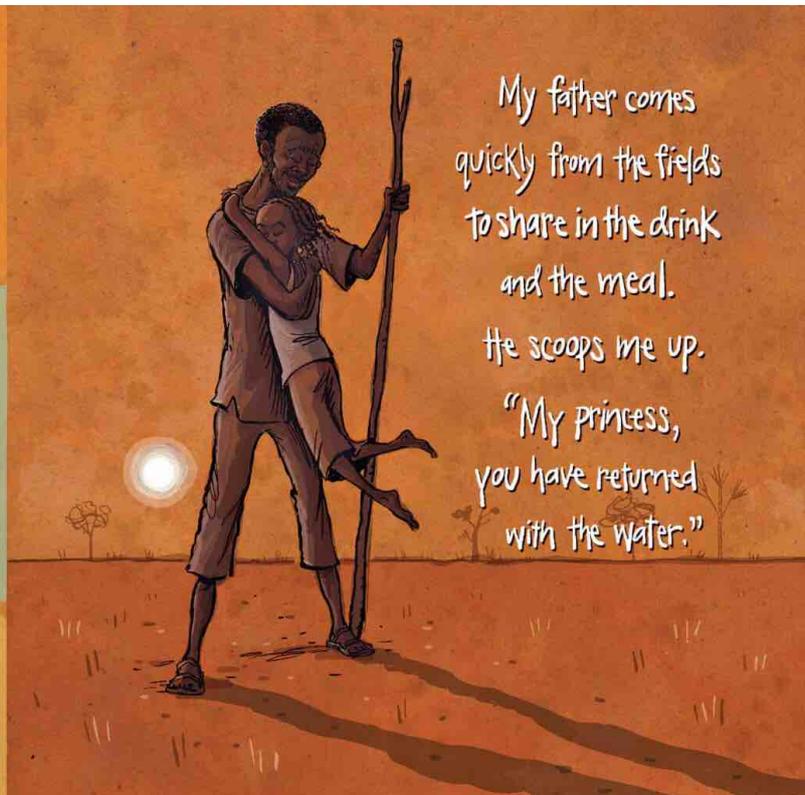

Our shoulders ache; our feet cramp.
I see home at last.

Maman boils enough water for drinking.
We wait.

We wash our clothes.

We prepare food
for cooking.

My father comes quickly from the fields
to share in the drink and the meal.
He scoops me up.
"My princess, you have returned with the water."

"Drink," Maman says.
Finally.

Every sip fills me with energy.

I want to make it last,
but I can't.
I gulp it down.

Clothes and body clean,
I sing to the dogs.
I dance with the tall grass.
I hide from the wind.

Maman brings one last cup
she has saved just for me.

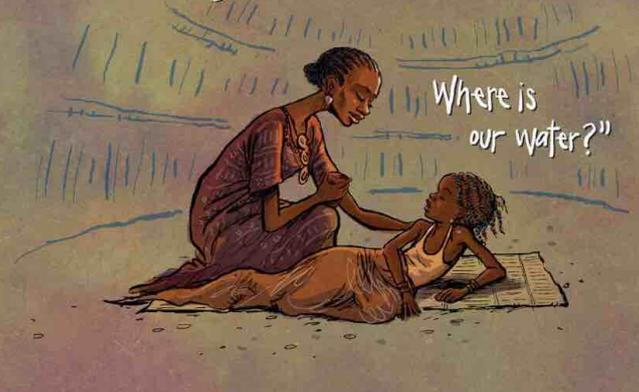

"Drink, my princess. Sleep, my princess.

Tomorrow we journey again!"

"Maman," I say as I close my eyes.

"Why is the water so far?"

Why is the water not clear?"

Where is our water?"

"Sleep," she says.
"Dream," she says.

"Someday you will find a way, my princess.
Someday."

I am Princess Gie Gie.
My Kingdom?
The African sky. The dusty earth.

And, someday,
the flowing, cool, crystal-clear water.

Someday...

The girls and women of Goundi, Georgie's grandmother's village in Burkina Faso, take the long walk to collect water. They do not yet have a well in their village.

The girls and women of Goundi have arrived at the river, where they fill their pots with water to bring back to the village. The water will still need to be cleaned before they will be able to drink it.

A little girl from Goundi carries water home. She has found the joy and playfulness in the journey; she is a water princess.

Imagine your life without water. No kitchen faucet to fill your glass when you are thirsty. No shower or bathtub to clean your body. Imagine if you couldn't go to school because you had to spend each day walking for miles just to get water and not even know if the water you reach will be clean. This is true for nearly one billion people around the world. That's one out of every six who doesn't have access to clean water.

This crisis is what motivated African model Georgie Badiel to work to make a difference and get clean water to those in need. As a young girl in Burkina Faso, Georgie spent her summers living with her grandmother. Every morning, Georgie and the other girls and women of the village walked for miles to fill pots with water and return it home to be used for the basics—drinking, bathing, cooking—only to wake up the next morning and make the journey again.

Georgie knows firsthand the suffering and struggle of all those without clean water. In Burkina Faso alone, nearly a quarter of the population has no access to clean water. Both illnesses from contaminated water and the time it takes to collect water every day prevent many children from going to school. The walk itself is on average four miles each day, which is the length of about seventy football fields!

The Water Princess is a story inspired by Georgie's own childhood and her wish that the water would come to her and those in her community. Together with Ryan's Well, Georgie is working to make a change and bring this basic right, this source of life, to the people of Burkina Faso and beyond. We hope this story brings awareness to the ongoing crisis and inspires you to be a part of the change.

For more information about what we can all do to make a difference, we hope you'll visit us at www.ryanswell.ca & georgiebadielfoundation.org

Georgie Badiel
Pete H. Reynolds

The children of L'École Primaire de Reo and Georgie Badiel celebrate the first Water Princess well built in partnership with Ryan's Well.

Georgie pumps clean water from the new well at L'École Primaire de Reo, which has about 578 students from six to twelve years old.

The children of Bechiliba play in the water from a new well built by the Georgie Badiel Foundation.